Share clips and notes MACKEYRO can be set to automatically upload the captured clips to your Dropbox account or to email them to anyone you want, provided that they have the app. Requirements: Mac OS X 10.6.8 and up. 6. CodeStripper CodeStripper is a program that turns HTML code into code that the web browser can understand. You can create any kind of code with it, including CSS and JavaScript, but this may take some practice. The program has a dual-pane interface. One pane is used for typing. The other pane is used for creating the code. The program has a visual preview window that lets you preview the code you are creating. CodeStripper supports a variety of syntax highlighting, such as CSS, JavaScript, PHP, XML, HTML, and other syntaxes. You can use single or double quotes, brackets, and other important punctuation marks to make your code readable. You can use the shortcut keys to quickly create a new code block and jump to the next statement. Furthermore, CodeStripper provides support for text selection and copy/paste to make it easy to copy text and paste it to other programs. There are two types of fonts available. You can choose between a monospaced font and a proportional font. For example, you could use a monospaced font for code that you are creating. This would be for programming languages, such as C and Perl. A proportional font would be good for HTML. CodeStripper lets you save the code you create to a file on your computer 2edc1e01e8

Capture My Screen is a free screen capture tool that enables you to take screenshots of your desktop with great ease. Kodi, the free, open source and highly customizable media center software, has now been built on a single framework: XBMC Media Center. Kodi will no longer be available as a separate media center application, but will be distributed as a module of XBMC. The separation makes it easier for users to contribute to the project, while at the same time, streamlining its development process. Kodi is an immensely powerful media center, capable of playing pretty much anything. But as a non-profit, users may want a bit more from a media center than just playing video and music. They may want to use their home computer as a video streaming device or watch movies on their TV. Kodi for Windows has improved accessibility in its performance and UI to make this possible.
